

Connecting the Dots—Why This Story Is Bigger Than Me

In the last 24 hours, I've heard a lot of questions.

“Where's the crime?”

“Why name one of the biggest pharmaceutical companies and a major wellness doctor?”

“How does this connect to your sister?”

“Is this really fraud—or just bad paperwork?”

Let me be clear: this isn't just about a business address.

This isn't just about me.

This is about a system that protects itself at the expense of the people it's supposed to serve. And everything I've shared—my wrongful conviction, my sister's death, the shell companies, the arbitration—it's all part of one interconnected story. You just haven't seen the full picture yet.

Let me show you.

Start with the Truth. Then Follow the Paper Trail.

Five months ago, I was working inside a Retail store, selling wellness products under what I believed was a legitimate W2 model. The company? DRVM LLC. They had me handing out samples, promoting Qunol and Zena Nutrition supplements—two brands tied to global wellness networks. I didn't think much of it at first. It was a paycheck. But just days into starting the job, everything changed.

My little sister—28 years old—was rushed to the hospital.

She died within 48 hours.

I only took two days off. Because that's all it takes when someone you love is slipping away.

And even in that moment—my world crumbling—I was expected to smile and sell supplements like nothing had happened. I didn't want to be alone, so I had my girlfriend visit me a couple times at work. A week later, they fired me. No warning. No write-up. Just done.

I asked for my final paycheck, but they refused. So I looked up the company in the Oregon Secretary of State database.

That's when I found out DRVM LLC was dissolved.

Legally dead. Not authorized to operate.

The name on my paychecks shouldn't have been paying anyone.

And that's when I started digging.

The Faces Behind the Paper

DRVM LLC is registered to a single address in Las Vegas.

That same address holds over 100 companies—all shells.

When I cross-referenced the owners, one of the first names that came up was a renowned MD and weight loss doctor in New Jersey. Co-owner? His father, cofounder of Qunol.

Now go look up Quten Research Institute, Qunol, and QRIB Intermediate Holdings.

You'll see those same names listed as co-founders—.

One address. Dozens of corporations.

Wellness brands, pharmaceutical connections, international links.

And none of it was supposed to be public.

When I was first brought on, I was told the name of the company was "Direct Demo." All of my onboarding documents were branded as "DR DEMO." Then, my training materials came from a group called "MK Marketing Team." But my paychecks came from DRVM LLC. That's four separate names for one job. That's not just confusing—it's intentional. It's designed to make accountability disappear.

When I traced those names, I found that MK Marketing itself was listed as dissolved in the Secretary of State database. And legally, you can't shut down a business and then open another under the same operational model to continue doing what you were doing without exposing yourself to liability. But that's exactly what I found.

Now ask yourself why that structure exists.

Shell Companies Aren't Illegal. What They're Hiding Is.

People have said, "It's normal for companies to share a registered agent address."

Sure. But DRVM wasn't just using the address—it was issuing payroll under a dissolved name.

That's illegal in Oregon. And it's not a clerical error.

It's the tip of an entire payroll structure built to obscure who's really profiting off the labor.

This is multi-state payroll fraud.

This affects taxes. This affects labor law.

And if you're a publicly traded company, it affects shareholder disclosures.

And when companies like Sanofi are tied to these operations—whether through shared addresses, shell structures, or contract manufacturing—you're not just talking about sketchy business.

You're talking about fraud on a global scale.

This Isn't Just About Payroll. It's About People.

People keep asking why I bring up my sister.

Because while I was being paid illegally by a shell company tied to billionaires, she was dying in a hospital system that treated her like trash.

She was gone in two days.

They were annoyed every time we asked to hold her hand.

They were more focused on their shift ending than her life ending.

This is the same system.

One side exploits our pain for profit.

The other side profits by pretending to heal us.

And while I watched her fade away, the people behind these brands were sitting on profits, protected by fake LLCs and offshore layers.

They don't even use our healthcare system—they fly somewhere else.

That's how little they trust the world they helped build.

Why They Want You Confused

Here's the thing no one tells you:

They want you skeptical.

They want you to roll your eyes when I say "shell company."

They want you to think this is too complex to matter.

But every piece ties together.

Our healthcare system.

Our justice system.

Our taxes.

Our education.

Our labor.

It's all written to protect the few who keep the machine running—and discard the rest of us.

And when someone connects all of it—they call him crazy.

Because once you see it, you can't unsee it.

So why a big pharmaceutical company and wellness doctor?

Because they're the ones you trust.

Because when you trust someone, you never look behind them.

This isn't about one company.

It's about the structure that lets companies do this over and over.

This arbitration is about holding the entities accountable.

This story is about showing the world what the system really looks like.

They're not the whole story.

They're just the part they never thought would get exposed.

To Those Still Questioning

Don't believe me yet? That's fine.

But follow the documents.

Follow the filings.

Watch the videos.

Read the chapters.

Ask your questions.

I'll show you everything.

And we're just getting started.

Stay with me.

For my sister.

For all of us.

Because this is no longer just my fight.

It's all of ours now.

What's Coming Next

Every chapter from here on out will take you deeper into my world—what I've been through, how I got pulled into this system, and what it's done to me since I was a teenager. I didn't grow up with safety. I didn't get protected. I've been fighting for survival against institutions that were supposed to help me, and instead, they labeled me, punished me, and tried to erase me. I've lived a painful life, not because of who I am, but because of the system I was born into. And now, I'm using everything I've been through to expose how deep that system goes.

As this series unfolds, I'll show you every discovery—each company I traced, every shell filing, every payroll violation, and how I studied the law myself just to understand what they were hiding behind. This is more than a personal story. It's a full-scale investigation—and by the time I'm done, you'll see exactly how the truth got buried under paperwork, and how I'm digging it back up one chapter at a time.
