

They're Watching Me. And I Know What Comes Next.

Let me just say it now. I know you're watching. I know the law firms are watching. I know the corporations are watching. You've been combing through my TikToks, my Reddit comments, my history, my story. I see your names in the views. I know how this works.

I'm not naïve.

You're going to try to discredit me.

You'll bring up my record. You'll drag my name. You'll twist every post and every truth I've put out. You'll take my sister's death and try to paint me as unstable. You'll take my tone and say I'm aggressive. You'll take my transparency and call it paranoia.

But here's the thing: I've already prepared for this.

This is a billion-dollar fraud case involving global pharmaceutical giants, political ties, shell companies, payroll misconduct, and the most well-connected law firms in the country. You think I didn't expect the backlash? You think I didn't anticipate the smear campaigns?

Of course you're going to come for me.

But I've already posted the evidence.

I've already submitted over 100 exhibits. I've already filed whistleblower claims with the IRS.

I'm already in formal arbitration. I've already crafted a three-motion legal package. I've done the work you didn't expect someone like me to do. And now I'm telling the public.

That's what scares you most. Because I'm not hiding. I'm not waiting for someone to rescue me. I'm pushing forward. I'm documenting everything. I'm putting it in the open. If you try to silence me, it's too late. The truth is already out there. The exhibits are public. The documents are live. The receipts are timestamped.

And every time you try to attack me, all you'll do is prove that I hit a nerve.

This isn't just a private arbitration anymore. This is public interest. This is about what happens when an individual with no corporate title and no legal background exposes a system meant to crush people like me.

So go ahead. Watch my videos. Scroll through my history. Screenshot my posts. But understand that everything you try to use against me is already part of the story I'm telling.

Sincerely

Jorden Hollingsworth
